TIGER LILY.

As twilight moon was shining down on the uneven surface of the wild mountain plateau, the lights of the little settlement shone like yellow dots of flame, here and there. To-night the barracks—mere rude wooden enclosures they were—were dimly constructed as a child's cart house—were in restless motion, for the men were to break camp in the morning.

For months they had been stationed at Omayo. When first the straggling settlement sprang up around the mountain ruins, whose hidden treasures had attracted the Indians, there had been trouble with the wandering Indians who haunted the slopes higher up—much the fault of the whites as of the red men, it is but just to say.

But the United States protects its own, and a body of men were stationed at once at Omayo, until the settlement was strong enough to stand on its own feet. And now the emergency was over, and the soldiers had been ordered to a military post a hundred miles or so to the north west.

Old Joe Jernigan sat smoking his pipe on the board platform in front of the General Supply Store. All the evening it had been full of customers, to-night, as the hands of the wooden clock round the figure head, he was at liberty to come and sit in his chair and smoke his pipe and stare at the moon, while Captain Ismay sat on the cracker barrel and talked with him.

Lily was Jernigan's niece and his daughter, and in addition to this the very apple of his eye—a tall, dark-eyed, handsome girl, with a pair of complexion and hair full of beauty and grace.

"Tiger Lily," Jernigan called her, sometimes in jest, sometimes in earnest, for she was as wild as a tiger and as sweet as a lily.

"Tiger Lily," Jernigan called her, sometimes in jest, sometimes in earnest, for she was as wild as a tiger and as sweet as a lily.

"Gone, eh?" said Benben Dorsey, the young foreman of the force now employed in establishing telegraphic communication between Omayo and Center City. "Well, it's no great matter. To-morrow will do very well. Nice night, Jernigan, isn't it?"

"Yes," he said.

The old man smoked on.

"The military division is getting ready to move to-morrow."

"So, you told."

"The captain's inside, isn't he, talking to Lily?"

Jernigan nodded without removing his pipe from his mouth.

Dorsey half rose, then sat down again.

"Well," said he, "I guess I won't disturb them."

Jernigan answered only by a sort of sigh.

"A nice man, that young Ismay?"

Once more old Joe nodded.

"They'll get more civilized quarters, I've heard, at Morton's Pass."

observed Dorsey, leaning back against the cedar post that formed one of the columns of the rude porch.

"Ismay's wife is to meet him there."

"Ismay's which?"

"His wife. From Sacramento City. Didn't you know he was married to old General Purviance's daughter?"

A runaway match, two years ago. Quite a romantic story."

"No," said Joe Jernigan, "I never heard it."

Dorsey talked a little longer, but old Joe paid no sort of attention to his words.

He did not even know when the young foreman went away.

"Ismay's wife!" he kept repeating to himself—"Ismay's wife!"

What will Lily say—poor Lily!—when she knows it? By gum! I've a mind to pitch the fellow down in the gulley when he comes out!

What business has a married man lurking around here, talking nonsense to the girls? But he'll find he won't pay to fool with my Tiger Lily! No, that it won't!

Captain Ismay went away presently, with a careless, good-humored air.

The old man glared at him as he departed, with red, savage eyes like those of a Spanish bull who looks at the slaughter.

The mounted he had watched behind the mainline thickets, Jernigan sprang up and made for the solitary road by a short cut which would be sure to intercept the wayfarer some quarter of a mile below.

"In his hand he grasped his open jack-knife, his heart beat like a galloping drum."

"My Tiger Lily!" he kept repeating to himself; "my own little sweet Lily! These are but one way to deal with the scoundrel who comes here to make a fool of her heart. No syllable in all the United States or any law to that, and hope to escape!"

He stood there waiting, but Ismay did not come that way.

"I'm baffled for once," Jernigan muttered. "He has taken the road round the lake. No matter! I'll hunt him down yet. Help to be in the plain-trail team, longer. They'll have to fight the regular captain at duty at Morton's Pass, that's all. I shall beat him when he comes down past the Echo Rock and I shall be ready for him."

He remained slowly—still staring his breath quick and drawing the wooden trigger of his gun in his hand, and his eyes were fixed on the old silent watch.

Inside the store he could hear Lily's light steps moving around, as she looked at the cash drawer and put the longer and day book away.

As she did so, she hummed a snatch of some tune. The sound went to old Joe's heart.

Poor child! how innocently happy she was!

In a minute or so she came out into the clear white moonshine.

"Well, Uncle Joe!" she said gaily.

"Well, my lass?"

The words were almost like a cry.

She sat down beside him, leaning her head against his arm.

He stroked down the bronze, gleaming hair with a dumb strength of longing tenderness in his heart.

Her cheeks were unaccountably red, her dark eyes sparkled beneath their long lashes.

"How shall I tell her?" thought the old man. "My pet lamb, that I wouldn't hurt for a king's ransom! I never was one to pick and choose my words, like a preacher or a lawyer. But she'd ought to know—yes, she'd ought to know!"

"Uncle Joe!" said Lily, after a moment or two of silence.

"Yes, my girl?"

"There—there's something I want to tell you."

"Is there, Lily?"

His heart sank within him. Was it coming now?

"You won't be vexed, Uncle Joe?" she said, nestling her head close against his arm.

"I—vexed with you, my girl! That ain't up-and-down likely, is it? But I've done wrong, Lily—I've forgot that a great rough man like me ain't the sort to look after a tender chick like you. I should be watched closer, Lily—that's what I should have done."

"What should you say, uncle," whispered Lily, "if I am to get married and leave you?"

"To—get married, Lily?"

"Haven't you suspected this, uncle, of late?"

"Yes, I have," said he, "but, oh, Lily, is your heart, very much in this?"

"Uncle?"

"Has he asked you to marry him, Lily?"

"Yes, uncle."

"Then"—the old man flung his clay pipe down upon the ground, where it broke into a score of fragments, and muttered a deep exclamation under his breath—"she's a villain, that's all."

"Uncle!" cried out the girl.

"And a double-dyed one at that!" said the excited old man.

"Lily! Lily! he has a wife already at Morton's Pass! He's going to her now."

Lily had lifted her head and looked earnestly at her uncle.

"But uncle, he isn't going to Morton's Pass."

"Yes, he is—in to-morrow. And I wish he'd fallen dead before he ever came to Ismay with his epaulettes and his jingling spurs, and his false, handsome face!"

"Uncle!" cried Lily, "whom are you talking about?"

"About Captain Ismay, to be sure."

near at North Marino, in the new works there, and whenever you can spare me uncle."

"Benben!" burst out Joe Jernigan.

"Yes, to be sure—Benben Dorsey. We've been engaged a long time now. Do you mean, you dear, darling, stupid old uncle, that you never suspected this?"

"Never!" said Uncle Joe, sniffling his knee with his fist. "But look here, Tiger Lily, do you love him?"

"Yes, Uncle Joe."

"And he loves you?"

"Of course he does."

"Then," said the old man, "I haven't a word of objection. I shall be awfully homesick without you, but as long as you're both happy, why, it's all right."

"And as he kissed her forehead, she thought she felt the touch of a tear on her brow."

"But it can't be possible," said Tiger Lily, to herself, "because who ever heard of Uncle Joe shedding a tear?"

But Tiger Lily did not know that this tear was not one of grief, but rather of thankfulness that there was no bloodguiltiness on his hands.

"TIGER is not a man, woman or child living who will ever date a letter or document without using the figure 3, if the date of the document is made complete. Why not? See. The 3 has come to stay many years. It is now on the right—1889. Next year it will move a step to the left—1890, stay there ten years and then take another step to the left—1900, and there will remain until you are done darning letters."

"Say, doctor," he remarked, strolling into the office, "what do you suppose is the matter with me?"

"What are your symptoms?" asked the M. D.

"Well, I have a great tendency to sit still, and let my wife bustle around the house. Again, in winter, I don't seem to feel like getting up and making the fire."

"You have a bad attack of nerves," said the doctor, "or perhaps by a liver trouble. You must be very careful."

"Then it ain't laziness?"

"Of course not."

"By George, then, I hope it will last."

Young Fitzgibbon (waiting for Miss Gusher to come down, to Johnny)—"Your sister has some very pretty flowers in the bay window, Johnny."

Johnny (who is always around)—"Now your talking, mister, she told Miss Gusher, yesterday, that she'd like to add you to the collection."

Fitzgibbon (delighted)—"Ah, how clever! What sort of a flower did she propose to call me?"

"A monkey plant."

When Miss Gusher comes home to receive her caller, Johnny is alone trying to tack the cat's tail to the floor.

Aunt Kinsale (severely)—"So you're going to try the experiment of reforming youth roughly after marriage. Is he worth reforming?"

Kittie (fearfully)—"Well, he's worth a million."

Sam Johnson happened to pay a visit to the county jail a few days ago, and who should he see inside of the bars but Uncle Benben Dorsey.

"What are you doing there, Benben?"

"I don't remember my head being stuck in a hole in the wall. How to get out is what I want to think about."

parted this life with bright prospects of Heaven. We extend our sympathies to his bereaved widow and two children. May they remember a tie is binding them to that other world which was not, at shorter time ago. There is a hand that will beckon a gentle voice that will be calling in softest tones of an waiting for them. May it brighten their dark days, and may they realize as he does the robes of spotless white, the lost which stand waiting about the pearly gates of glory, burst into song as of that morning of old, when the morning stars sang jubilee and the beauteous wings and beneath his re-beared spirit and waiting it within,
and may their hearts softly echo:
"All is Well."

PRUNELLA.
Some men went to the house of Mrs. Catherine Stoen, an old widow lady eighty years old, living in Moore county, N. C. There was no one at the house but Mrs. Stoen and her servant, Bettie Johnson, an old colored woman. The man knocked at the door and asked to be admitted inside. He was told to go away, no company could be entertained as there was no man at the house. He, however, broke down the door and shot the colored woman, and then with pistol in hand went into Mrs. Stoen's room and demanded her money, threatening to kill her if she refused. When told there was no money in the house the brutal jumped upon the helpless woman and terribly beat her with a pistol.

Chas. Medlin, Mrs. Stoen's neighbor, is in jail charged with the crime.

The young city of Bonanza Va., which is not yet ten years old is exposition next year.

Of Valuable Lands.

The first evidence that the first declaration of the result of the State election in West Virginia was in accordance with the facts and the law is the way which General Goff, the Republican candidate for Governor, has submitted after the long and bilateral declarations of last winter.
He has been buying himself with the dispensing of patronage in his State while waiting for the "good things" which the Administration is supposed to have in store for him personally. In fact, he has been allowed to have his way to such an extent in disposing of offices in West Virginia that "Steve" Elkins is dissatisfied. Goff himself did not fall outside the breakfast while leading an attack which carried them for the President; but he is a pending person who expects, all the same, to be provided for, and the only difficulty seems to be to find something big enough to meet his expectations.
If Partner Miller should go on the Supreme Bench, he thinks the place of Attorney General would aban-

Rheumatism,

BRINGING due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, is most effectively cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Be sure you get Ayer's and not others, and take it till the poisonous acid is thoroughly expelled from the system. We challenge attention to this testimony.

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly ten years from rheumatism, being able to walk only with great difficulty, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw in an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to take a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months, and the place to state that it has effected a complete cure. I have since had no return of the disease."—Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th st., New York.

"One year ago I was taken ill with inflammatory rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."—Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nahant, N. H.

OLD ROCK.

On the eve of their bridal day, Jessie and John, who were not very far from each other, but it proved that such a thing could be between them and was not pleasant. Besides, it was a terrible time for each a thing. It began by Jessie asking John what he was going to do with Rock, a big black dog he was very fond of.

"Do with him?" said John. "Why, what I always have—put him in the pound."

"You don't mean to keep him, do you?" said Jessie. "You'll sell him."

"Sell him?" cried John. "Why, I would sell him like selling your baby or your grandfather. He's been my friend for years—adored under my bed, followed me to work, shared my lunch. Why, I had him when I was a poor, motherless boy. I had used to kick as he sat together. Many a time, when he'd been drinking, and we'd walk up to gether for warmth in some arroyo. Now I'm comfortable, I don't kick him out. No, indeed, I couldn't."

"I hate dogs," said Jessie.

"Well, you've got to learn to love Old Rock," said John, laughing.

"Love me, love my dog, and in this case, as you've got him, so."

"I've got to," said Jessie, indignantly. "Ordering me like that, as if I were a dog!"

"I told you, as well you know, John."

"Well," said John, "I always supposed that was because you liked me best, but not of self-sufficiency."

"At least," said Jessie, "the dog's been a dog of that sort, and he was on his knees in an arroyo. Oh, don't I don't think you care about me, John. I read a novel the other day, and in it the young man created a favorite for his lady. I don't think I'm so devoted to her."

"If I was in love with Old Rock, he'd be too much for me to resist," said John, smiling. "I'll let you see."

"I don't want to take a life of him. The dog you want to show his affection for you by carrying him in the carriage-makers and having him put up into being nice for winter use?"

This was not brilliant, and unfortunately Jessie was disappointed, as most any person. They were not fashionable people. She was an honest, pretty, little factory girl. He was a young planter. But they have been very much in love with each other. This was a dash of cold water to both. They felt the propriety of a separation at this time and parted with a kiss, as usual, but the thought troubled in each mind.

Jessie thought of it as she made ready for her wedding, and as her friends looked at her new things, she had a pretty fair set for her, really furnished for her, and things with all every use, in a plain way, but what happiness could she expect if he was as cross about a little thing? And then to have silly, black Rock, with his muddy belt, his way of carrying about and showing his tongue in gapes, always following about. It was not a pleasant thought for the day before a wedding.

Meanwhile, the day wore on; the guests came. The bride was dressed. The minister arrived with his old wife. Everybody had come but the bridegroom and his best man, and who were in the little paragon. The clock loudly pointed to the hour for the ceremony. John had not come. Jessie tried to sit still to smile, to laugh and talk but she kept saying to herself: "What keeps him? Could he really have been angry? Could it be possible that he meant to break with her in this dreadful manner just about Old Rock?" She listened—the bell rang. Had he come? No! It was only the best man, alone. He reported that he had waited for John, and that he had not been home to supper. His wedding suit was spread in his bed, but there was no sign of John.

"I don't know but he might be here," said the young man, looking about. But John was not there.

In her own room the bride wept and women came and went trying to comfort her. They fingered late Eleven, twelve, one o'clock saw the minister still sitting in the great chair in the parlor, ready to marry John if he came, but though the bride's friends flew about the city and inquired everywhere, there was no news of the missing bridegroom.

That he had left her in wrath was Jessie's explanation of the matter; and it was she who at last declared that people had better go home, for that she would not marry John. If he came on his bended knees to ask pardon.

Meanwhile the missing bridegroom had gone to work as usual, expecting, as it was Saturday, to get off earlier than usual, and had been pleased that he finished his work at four o'clock; but coming in eager to ask leave to go home, he found himself in a commotion. A gas pump had burst in a public building, where there was danger of leaving it unpaired very long, and only one other man was in the place—Sam Williams, his old rival.

"You too must go," said the proprietor, waving his hands about. "I know it is hard, John; but Sam can bring the furnace and tools in, and you can get straight home. You have time, and you shall be paid for overtime, both of you, and I'll send a present to the bride on Monday. This is a necessary job, or I'd let you off."

John did not grumble, though he felt irritated. He hurried off as fast as he could, followed by Williams. The men did not like each other, and Williams was still jealous.

They spoke very little. Old Rock followed at John's heels and crouched outside the building, when he was locked out, as usual.

The men's work took them down into the cellar, and into some great vaults there. They worked without any more talk than was necessary, and at last the job was done. Williams had tested the lock at his part of the work and was about to call to John, whose light shone at the other end of the dark cellar, when suddenly the light went out. There was a crash, a cry. Williams did not know what had happened, but judged that a great beam had been lifted out of place had fallen. He waited; there was silence. And now having the opportunity, the demoniac spirit of revenge asserted itself. He would not have planned to kill his rival, but he thought with joy that some had been lifted out of place had fallen. He thought, too, that it was not his work, and that he was not called upon to alter it. If John was dead, Jessie would be free again. Then he said to himself with Satan's ambiguity:

"How do I know anything has happened? John has gone home, leaving the door after him. That's all. A fine way to go off and leave a fellow," he said aloud, and gathered up the furnace and bag of tools and went his way locking all the doors behind him, and leaving the keys with the person who had charge of them, saying that his mate had gone off without a goodbye, leaving him alone in the cellar.

"Queer I never saw him," said the old man; but Sam did not relent. He took a night train out of town to spend Sunday at his mother's in the country and be out of the way of questions.

And this is how John did get home to his own wedding. He lay in the cellar hardly conscious, unable to lift the beam from his leg, and in a sort of dream, thinking of his Jessie and seeming to hear Old Rock's voice somewhere.

The poor girl arose switched and quite sure that John had lifted her. She never thought of any accident. As she sat at her late breakfast, trying not to show her grief and shame, and wondering how she should go home and face the girls, something passed at the door.

The mother opened it, and the dog she hated so, Old Rock himself, walked in. He looked forlorn and hungry, his coat covered with mud, his eyes red, his appearance miserably hideous, his manners, too, had altered for the worse, for instead of galloping playfully about, striving to lick Jessie's face and wagging his tail, as usual, he sat down on his hind legs and began at once to deliver a series of those piteous howls with which his species are supposed by the superstitious to celebrate the departure of an immortal soul from this vale of tears.

At this, a sudden revulsion took place in Jessie's feelings, and with a wild scream she uttered her conviction that John was dead, and that she knew it.

In this the family coincided to an individual. Then the dog began to pull at Jessie's foot.

"We have had our doubts, we have had our doubts," groined the father. "John's not a man to jilt a girl that way, quarrel or no quarrel."

"And the dog just says it plain as words," sobbed the mother. "When my grandfather was drowned his dog came home just like that. Oh, poor John! You'll never see him no more, child, never no more!"

Meanwhile, the dog puffed and howled harder than ever.

"Silence, there," cried the old grandmother, from the easy corner, where she was breaking her bread into a bowl of coffee. "Mebbe the parrot spirit came along with the dog. The creature is going to lead you to the body. Stop your crying, go. Follow him. He knows better than you, for John's along of him. Go."

With her blood curdling in her veins, Jessie obeyed. She tied on her hat, and buttoned herself into a sash, and went down the stairs and out into the streets, with the Sabbath stillness upon them. It was not easy to keep peace with Old Rock along the pavements but she did so, and at last stepped with her before a great, empty-looking public building. Here the dog lowered at a grating, and began to howl again.

It was more than Jessie could stand. She burst into bitter tears and was obliged to sit down on the sidewalk and hide her face in her hands.

"Is he down there, Rock?" she sobbed. And Rock wagged a "Yes" with his queer, happy tail.

Then Jessie went to work. A policeman, kindly disposed; an old man with a bunch of keys; much talk a disclosure of the fact that planter's were down below late Saturday afternoon, but at last to a decent into the cellar, where Old Rock, in a state of delight puffed all bounds, led to the spot where John lay, with a broken leg and lacerated arm, but conscious and not fatally injured; and when she was sure of this, Jessie took Old Rock's head in both her hands, and kissed it fondly over and over again.

"You told me I'd have to love him, and it's come true; and he's brought us together, and as long as he lives he shall be as dear to me as he is to you. There, now!"

It was some time before they were married, but there was no more quarreling; and Jessie and John are a very happy couple. It is reported of Old Rock that the first time he met Sam Williams he hit him; and that, Jessie declares, is a proof that Sam knew all about John's being in the cellar, though he swears he did not.

Last evening two youths, each about 14, met in the street, when the following dialogue took place:

"I say, Bill, got my knife?"

"No, I ain't."

"Pon your word?"

"Pon me word."

"Pon your soul?"

"Pon me soul."

"Hope you may die if you have?"

"Hope I may die if I have?"

"You ain't got my knife?"

"I ain't got your knife."

The querist seemed to be incredulous, but was on the point of giving it up in despair when a bright idea occurred to him, and he returned to attack with:

"Pon your honor?"

"Oh," said the other, "now you touch me honor; take your damned old knife," and he handed the article over.

"Well done, Bill," said his chum, "I alas knowed you was a honorable chap."

A burglar who had been arrested while in the act of breaking into a bank pleaded guilty to the charge when arrested in Court, but claimed extenuating circumstances.

"What possible excuse can you present to mitigate this offense?" asked the Court.

"My lord, had I succeeded in getting my hands on the cash it would have removed temptation from the path of the cashier."

"I've said the Judge, after mature reflection. 'I see the point, which is well taken. I'll let you off on about three years.'"

Moral—If you can steal a man's horse it may save his head, from going to State prison.

McCurkie—"And so you're engaged, McCurkie. He told us all about it."

McNichol—"Yes, it's a go this time. You see, Isabella and I were out on the beach."

McCurkie—"Yes."

McNichol—"And the mosquitoes were very thick."

McCurkie—"Yes."

McNichol—"And I wanted to get in."

McCurkie—"Yes."

McNichol—"And Isabella for some reason wanted to stay out."

McCurkie—"Yes."

McNichol—"That's all. It was proper or he eaten by mosquitoes, so I proposed."

Next year the modest, retiring North Pole is to be the object of another search, involving expense and possible loss of life. Dr. Nansen, a Norwegian, is going for it this time.

Mrs. Philip H. Sheridan and her children are living at the cottage in Nonquitt, Mass., in which the General died. Mrs. Sheridan has entirely recovered her health and strength.

John L. Blair, the New Jersey railroad magnate, who confesses to a fortune of $40,000,000, earned his first dollar by walking to Easton and back, a distance of twenty-five miles, to sell a lot of rabbit skins.

A process has been invented by means of which photographs can be printed almost as fast as newspapers, and without dependence on sun or light. They are said to be of the first quality. That of course would make photographs much cheaper.

There is a woman in Milwaukee who is the mother of nine children. Not one of them were named until it was twelve years old. They were simply called by their nicknames and their numbers, "One," "Two," etc. As each one became twelve years old he chose his own name and was baptized.

Johnstown, Pa., which was devastated by flood some months ago is forging ahead, and will soon have in operation a number of large industries, employing 5,000 or 6,000 workmen, and pay out between $100,000 and $200,000 each week in wages. The steel works of the Carnegie are being rebuilt and enlarged, costly residences are being rebuilt and business houses are being completed and plans matured for a much more extensive city than it was before the waters swept it away.

A Monument to Columbus, erected by a Frenchman, and the only one in America, has remained in obscurity in Baltimore for more than a hundred years. It is now likely to come into prominent notice. New York will probably get up a magnificent Exposition in honor of the discoverer of America; but well is it, perhaps, that the considerate Frenchman did not leave the monument enterprise to that city.

Why is it?

The editor of the Callatorary Democrat, Captain Thomas D. Marston, late of the Union Army, has asked the question, "Why is it?" and compounds as follows:

"Why is it that most of the ex-Confederates are stout and well preserved men for their age, while most of the ex-Union soldiers are broken down from their service and are on the pension rolls or trying to get there. It is a fact that none will dispute that the Confederate army was not as well fed nor clothed as the Union soldiers were; that they were physically more exposed than were the Union troops, yet most all of the ex-Union soldiers claim to be suffering from injuries and disease from their service, while the Confeds are robust and look as though they would be able for several years' good service in the field were it required of them. However, there are many who believe that the ex-Union soldier would be stouter and more robust and present in the various vocations of life if there were no pensions at all attached to alleged disability incurred while in the service. It seems to be more trying on a man's constitution to be loyal to the Government than it was to be a Rebel. Some how there is something about the matter that needs explanation."

WASHINGTON LETTER

(From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON Oct. 4.—The Cabinet meeting held to-day was a little strong Union affairs raised a small cyclone, and before that had passed away the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court brought about a hurricane. At least two members are bitterly opposed to the appointment of Attorney General Miller, which President Harrison seems determined upon. It must have been a rather embarrassing position for Mr. Miller, who was present.

President Harrison is still wrestling with the problem of trying to find a man for Pension Commissioner who can satisfy the applicants for pensions without creating a financial deficiency. The thing is impossible, but of course its none of our business, if the administration wants to wear itself out in that way let it go ahead. The latest man named as likely to have an opportunity of declining to occupy General Tamm's shoes is Ex-Gov. Harrison, of Pennsylvania. Two men stand ready to occupy the position, Brown, of Ohio, and Campbell, of Kansas, but their readiness makes President Harrison shy of them.

Mr. Maine is at last President, not of the United States, but of the Three America's Congress. He was elected to the position Wednesday when the Congress met and organized. Ex-Senator Henderson of Missouri was elected President pro tempore. Mr. Maine's speech of welcome to the members of the Congress was a model of its kind, and is highly praised here by members of both parties. Immediately after adjourning to November 15, the Congress called on the President with whom the members took lunch. Thursday morning they left on a special train for a tour of the North East and West. They are certain to be impressed by what they will see and will return to Washington prepared to discuss more intelligently the matters brought before them. It is thought at the State department that the Congress will sit about three months.

Democrats here express considerable disappointment over the result of the elections in the new states. They had begun to expect some thing different. Secretary Tracy's difficulty in getting a Naval officer to command the Kearsarge, which started from New York Tuesday for Haiti with Fred Douglass, our minister to that country as a passenger, has been the subject of a great deal of joking around Washington this week. As soon as it was known that the commanders could not be given up to Fred, nobody who knows the personal habits of that individual blamed the Naval officers for getting out of the dilemma in any way possible. Secretary Tracy got very mad, but all the same I'll bet a big red apple Tracy would not entertain Douglass five or six days at his private residence for a year's salary. Douglass is a very brainy man, but he is a negro for all that, and no white man who respects himself will care to be closely associated with him in a social way. I am inclined to believe with the Kearsarge that "there's as much in the blood of people as in the bones."

Ex-Representative Harris, of Virginia, who has just made a trip through that state, says the democrats will have a walk over, and that Mahone will never again be heard from politically. I have it on good authority that several members of the administration have given up all hope of Mahone's election.

Senator's Hampton, of North Carolina, and Harris, of Tennessee are very wide apart in their ideas of a correct solution of the race problem. Senator Hampton has for a long time advocated the purchase of land in Mexico, or of an island, and the colonization thereon of the negroes of the Southern states. Senator Harris being asked what he thought of such a scheme replied: "I do not consider it practical at all. The negro doesn't want to be colonized, and the devil only had those who are trying to make practical capital out of him there would be no trouble to speak about." Senator Harris is one of the large number who believe that the business of Congress has grown to such dimensions that continuous sessions ought to be held.

Representative Breckinridge, of Arkansas, thinks all the republican talk about the Rules of the House is intended to work the courage of the weakened republicans up to the point of seating all eighteen of the republican contestants.

Charges have been filed at the department of state against Lord Lewis, of Pennsylvania, consul agent at Morocco. He is accused of having attempted to extort a large sum of money from a vice consul as the price of his retention in office. Mr. Reed is one of President Harrison's appointments.

The Knight Templars are beginning to arrive for the Conclave. They will remain here ten days.

A Marriable Double Murder.

On the 4th inst., Felix Kampffling near Charleston, went to his house, and having missed some articles he went to a cabin about a quarter of a mile away, where his daughter Mary aged 20 and his son aged 18 lived and accused the son of having stolen some "dark iron" from his house. The old man became violently angry and when the daughter denied taking the iron he drew a two edged deck from his belt and assaulted her. He stabbed the girl several times, once in the stomach and once the abdomen.

The boy who was eating his supper with his sister jumped and grabbed his father in order to prevent the murder of his sister, when the enraged father plunged the knife into his son's abdomen, letting out his bowels and cutting them in several places. They both died the next morning. The father is in jail.

M. G. MATTHEWS, Pres.

It was, indeed.

Kansas City Times.]

The Republican party has upset the faithful business system of Mr. Cleveland's administration. It has swung into its old habit of robbing the Treasury for class bribery. It has committed the financial crime of making a deficit in the Treasury accounts, something which the present generation regarded as unpardonable with our enormous revenue. Expose these blunders and crimes before 10,000 people and the widening wave of indignation will sweep the robber party out of any semblance of ascendancy it may have in that region.

Old Judge John Black was once asked to join the Republican party and said he: "You Republicans are a lot of fellows for all the purposes of this world—for power and plunder and good fellowship it is the best party that could be created. If I was quite sure that there is no future state of rewards and punishments I would join you instantly. Nothing but the fear of hell deters me."

Indigestion

It is not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system embarrassed, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lakin, of Brookway Centre, Mich.:

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered excruciating pains, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate meats could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians had been consulted, but all failed. Nothing that I took seemed to do me any good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced a permanent cure. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest food. The food I ate, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of perfect recovery to your directions, I have secured a well earned and permanent cure. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."
